I am a scientist and photographer living in the Washington DC area. I started my journey of looking through the lens by studying tiny cells under a microscope. It eventually evolved into my hobby of landscape, wild-life and macro photography. As an outdoor photographer, I was fortunate enough to travel to many countries on six continents and capture many unique and beautiful moments. In the past two years, I have become passionate about portrait photography. Portrait photography can be a wonderful and rewarding experience for both the photographer and the subject. Portrait photography allowed me to capture a person's individuality and essence in a single image. I can use lighting, composition, and posing to bring out the subject's personality and create an image that truly represents them. Because portrait photography requires interaction between the photographer and the subject, which can lead to a deeper connection and understanding of the person being photographed, I was able to connect to all my subjects that I photographed. Portrait photography allowed me to experiment with different lighting, poses, and backgrounds to create unique and visually striking images. It also gave me a great opportunity to push my creative boundaries and try new things.

I was fortunate enough to interact with immensely talented Courtney Lynn Elwood during a portrait meet in Baltimore, MD. Courtney Lynn Elwood is a singer and songwriter, model, actress and voice-over artist based in the Philadelphia area. Courtney has pursued creative passions since childhood when she attended the Cab Calloway School of the arts. She's acted in movies, ads, national tv commercials & music videos and her music is available on streaming platforms. In addition to her passion for the arts, Courtney is also a licensed clinical social worker and psychotherapist. In her present job, she works as a program manager for a whole health and wellness program and is passionate about helping to empower people to find their authentic selves, pursue their passions and heal through the arts. You can follow Courtney on Instagram at instagram.com/courtneynnelwood

During our photo shoot, we kept on discussing and experimenting. We discussed ideas and she gave me a lot of constructive input throughout the shoot resulting in the amazing images at the end. We got the images we wanted. She is very comfortable in front of the camera and very easy to work with. I am so glad to have worked with her and looking forward to working with her again in near future.

Mae
Gudino

My name is Mae and I'm eight years old. I love dancing so much, it has just provided so many opportunities in my life to learn, grow and feel confident! Some of my best friends in life are my teachers and dance sisters! When I grow up, I wanna be a choreographer and I wanna dance on Broadway. I am dyslexic, and in most of my life, it creates frustrating challenges that I have to learn to work around and overcome, but it also makes the part of me that learns and create dance extra special helping me think so much more outside the box then just what I'm thinking in that moment. I find life in the music. Every song tells a different story for a different mood for a different day. I'm just beyond blessed that this is my life!

Rachel Sui Generis

Rachel Sui Generis is a plus size model and body positive advocate from Maine. You may be wondering, what is "Sui Generis"? Rachel has always been a bit of an intellectual and Sui Generis is Latin, translated to today's standards; rare as f*ck. Her passion for modeling came early when she watched the rise of Emme, the very first full figured model to be chosen for People magazine's 50 Most beautiful people in 1994.

"Growing up as an athletic plus sized kid in the 90s when heroin chic was at its peak and seeing Emme make headlines as the first full figured model to be chosen for 50 most beautiful people allowed me an opportunity to see a body similar to mine not only be accepted, but viewed as beautiful. Representation in social media and fashion plays a major role in teens and young adults ability to accept their own bodies in a way that curates long term self respect and self love"

She began her modeling at the age of 17 walking in in store runway shows for Fashion Bug. She carried this throughout her travels to Ireland where she modeled in store for Evans UK. After a ten year hiatus from modeling, Rachel returned to the modeling world with a new found fervor to encourage other bigger bodied people to embrace their substance and challenge society by unabashedly taking up space in the world. She teamed up with Taylor Jan Photography on a body positive project in which she took some of the favorite bully insults from school and turned them into creative talk backs in the form of photos. This catalyst propelled Rachel's creative spirit and further fueled her drive. She went on to walk in her first runway show in 15 years in February of 2022. Since then she's walked in multiple runway shows, including New England Fashion Week, participated in multiple content days and modeled for several local businesses.

One of her proudest moments came while walking in New York Fashion Week for spring 2023 in which only 1% of the models walking in all of the NYFW productions were plus sized.

Her message to her followers and non followers alike is to embrace all of the things that make you who you are. Her merch line, aptly titled "Rare AF" is meant to be customized. When someone purchases one of her shirts, they're asked to customize it to their own personal style, she doesn't want people to wear her brand, she wants people to be SEEN in OUR brand.

The last two years have been full of incredible opportunity, meeting new people and having the pleasure of working with unbelievably talented designers. Coming up for her is a body positive lingerie fashion show at the end of April, a 500 seat show that sold out in less than 24 hrs.

Rachel's trajectory has been looking up since day one and we certainly don't see it slowing any time soon. Her goal for 2023 is to be signed to an agency and start booking commercial gigs to expand her influence and voice amongst bigger bodied people. You can find Rachel on Instagram and TikTok @rachelsuigeneris.
