My name is Wheatley. I am 37. I've been tattooing since I was 17 so it's about 21 years. I've been a professional artist in Austin Texas since 2011. I hope to one day open up my own tattoo studio in a warehouse which joins my second passion, Vintage cars. I have a 73 Chevy G2 van, I built the engine myself. His name is Steve BlueChevy. he's baby blue, obvi. eventually I want this warehouse to become built out in a loft style on the second floor where I can house foster kids. I want to teach them a skilled trade so that when they age out of the system, they don't have to live on the street and sale ass. My hope is to teach them auto mechanics, motorcycle mechanics, or tattooing whichever one they feel more drawn to. I'm 37 and I don't have any kids. I don't think that's going to happen for me so it's my way of leaving my Mark on this world and nurturing my motherly drive. I grew up in very unstable conditions. I've been homeless many times and tattooing is the only thing that's kept me from being dead in a ditch. My love for cars came out of necessity. I couldn't afford to pay for repairs so I learned how to repair them myself. I went to school and got a degree in it eventually. I'm thankful for my tenacity and my unwavering stubbornness to get me through learning to wrench and tattoo. Back then there wasn't very many female tattoo artist. it felt very daunting at times. I've had multiple men through out my life, tell me I will never be as good as them, but because I'm pretty I'll always do OK. I used to hate the people that said those things to me, but now I appreciate them for what they did for me because it lit the fire in my stomach to keep going, to push through and become better than anybody who has ever said that to me. There are many great artists out there better than me but I can say with pride "go fuck yourself, I tattoo better than you" to anyone who's ever equated my success to my age and looks instead of my hard work and perseverance.
